

Mission Statement

I strive each day to make myself a better human being. I feel that in order to do this a certain amount of self reflection is necessary. One method I use for this is art. I use my art practices to process and express, envision and experience the world around me. The documentation of this evolution is in the art. I am acutely aware of how humans have behaved throughout history in regards to their relationship to the natural world and to each other. Aside from a few exceptions this interaction is one of selfish consumption and lack of understanding. I am still unraveling my own relationship to this world so many of us share. It is my mission to continue to question and explore everything in hopes of better understanding and functioning as a part of this larger system. Through my art and my interactions, I encourage others to explore their place in the order of things and how to best express and evolve all the myriad of possibilities that exist in life and art.