

“Time may change me, but I can’t trace time” David Bowie

Change is the one constant in life. With so much information coming at us, so many real causes of concern, and things to care about, I find myself in constant state of re-constellation. My studio practice has always reflected my outer and inner life, so the work must reflect the changes. Painting has this wonderful ability hold so much experience, so much philosophy, so many desires and beliefs that it has always been well suited to address the ever-changing concerns of this complicated contemporary existence. I just don’t think one response is adequate anymore which is why my approach changes as the world evolves around me and within me.