

JEFF MYERS

Jeff Myers was raised in a photojournalistic environment; both his parents are photographers and with the guidance of Ansel Adams in their early stages of photographing, they amassed a visual archive of 700,000 transparencies of the west and its people. Jeff Myers recalls, “One day we would be photographing a cotton gin and the next a protest for migrant farm workers rights at the state capitol.” Myers has been published by National Geographic, National Wildlife, Animals Magazine of London and many other publications. Due to dyslexia, Myers struggled greatly in the public education system and had to create his own path for learning. This entailed taking many college art courses and spending many hours with working artists such as Wayne Thiebaud, who remains a close friend to this day. Living with dyslexia and following this unique education path together have resulted in a rich foundation for many original subtleties in Myers' work. Myers began exhibiting at the age of 15 and debuted with a one person show at the Michael Himovitz gallery at 19. Myers's early paintings deal with marginalized American sub-cultures juxtaposed with class differences. “I have always been interested in contrasts, whether cultural, environmental or visual”, Myers explains. This body of work was influenced by Italian Futurism and the Mexican Muralists. “I wanted to wed the staccato frequency of Boccioni with the scale and subject matter of Siqueiros”, Myers states. Years later after re-locating to New York, Myers completed “The Undercurrent Project,” a visual study of people's work environments who were at the center of new media in the print and fashion worlds. Having first constructed three dimensional aluminum reliefs, Myers then painted the sitters fragmented portraits with work spaces. Myers reflects, “ Here was this broad digital front that was shaping cultural opinion, and my visual inquiry took it back to the intimate; I wanted to show the back story”. Myers staged two exhibitions of “The Undercurrent Project” in the cavernous Greenpoint Manufacturing and Design Center, in Brooklyn New York.

Myers eventually moved back to Northern California, where the vision of vast spaces and the people who worked the land contrasted greatly with the New York environment. Thus was born, “The Land Series”, in painting and in digital photography, “The Bodyen Series”. Both series deal with the great contrasts, and yet critical links, between the frenetic digitized urban consciousness and the quiet stillness of agricultural land. Antiquated farm machinery became a starting point. “The tractors and threshers seem to be the holders of secrets, much like a Zen koan.” Through the use of reverse-perspective, Myers layers cities such as Tokyo or New York around and within the giant machines. This interaction creates a type of high bred Ag/Urban metaphor.

With over 25 years working as a full time artist, Myers's authenticity is both provocative and pioneering, showing that an artist can be multidisciplinary by interlacing new and old media and still retain ones own original voice. Myers's paintings and photographs have been published and written about over seventy times nationally and locally. Myers continues to exhibit across the country and is developing a national following.

EXCERPTS FROM CRITICAL REVIEWS

“Indeed Myers is a deft and prolific painter. Large swatches of paint, delicate impressionist daubs, surfaces built up or surfaces scraped, all point to the same conclusion, namely, that he is a talent”

By James Scarborough

VISIONS ART QUARTERLY MAGAZINE – from three page article

“HARVEST OF COLOR AND LIGHT”

“These machine images are compelling and there made more so by Myers brilliant handling of color.”

By Victoria Dalkey, THE SACRAMENTO BEE - from two page, 6 image article

“Wedding earnest social subject matter and expressionistic color and brushwork with the explosive visions of the Italian Futurists, his eye-jarring. Disjunctive paintings contained echos of Boccioni's Burning City, social realist murals, and the operatic emotionalism and scale of neoexpressionistic painters.”

By Victoria Dalkey,
ART OF CALIFORNIA MAGAZINE – from three page article.

“Jeff Myers' paintings and prints present the viewer with compelling images of a world in flux. Combining abstraction and representation, Myers creates a feeling of poetic sensibility through interwoven perspectives”

By Shirley Dubnick
ART NOW GALLERY GUIDE, WEST COAST – with cover image and article.

“The new exhibition of big, brash, wonderfully peculiar paintings by Jeff Myers makes it clear that Jeff Myers was no one day wonder.”

By Victoria Dalkey
SACRAMENTO BEE – From one page article, Encore section.

“Remember Lumiere's cinema-verite and Milies' cinema-fantasy of the 1890s? Well, Myers' versions of Lumiere's Man Watering His Garden and other commonplace eventualities suggest opposing polemics of two disparate dualities: the mundane (realism), and arcane (surrealism) , inter-blend in Myers' paintings.”

By Darrell Forney
ON THE WING - from three page article with images.

“The figures, while central to the action, seem alienated from the fictive aerial vews of lively and colorul industrial landscapes. Myers' oils concentrate on scenes of the human conditiona and the made environment, resulting in a “tug-o-war” between realism and abstraction”
