1 In 2013 I conceived of Officina Stamperia del Notaio, an international artists' residency program and printmaking studio in the small town of Tusa, Sicily, my father's birthplace where I've spent my summers since childhood and have a second residence. With the support of family friend and collaborator Alfonsina Bellomo who provided the space (an abandoned warehouse complex in the center of town dating back to the 1500s) the construction and renovations began in 2014. In 2015 we hosted our first artist in residence - a filmmaker and Pew Fellow, plus a group of international artists as an informal retreat (as part of the collaborative curatorial project Due South), and our first official residency season took place in 2016. We have continued to grow and expand. Since 2016 we have hosted close to 30 artists, writers and filmmakers, held numerous community workshops featuring alternative photography and printmaking, hosted a 2-week on-site fresco painting workshop led by instructors from Temple University Rome and Stonehill College, and have held public events including exhibitions and open studio events. In addition to facilitating exchange between artists, the residency has become a welcome feature of the town of Tusa, which in turn benefits from the exposure and yearly influx of activity and the modest yet noticeable economic boost the presence of the residency provides to this small town, which like many in the region, struggles to survive.
