

I was born to be an artist. I started to paint when I was 4 years old. The first time I painted, it was the president of the Czech Republic. My kindergarten teacher called my mom to suggest that I get some art classes. Later, my mom feared that I would be a “starving” artist, so I was sent to business school instead. I graduated but my dream was to create and to create only. I came to USA 11 years ago alone. I opened an art gallery in Chicago and started to have shows all around the United States, including NYC, Florida, San Francisco. I tried everything. I taught myself everything that I know. I keep breathing and painting, using different materials and tools that challenge me. To create art is the only way I know how to be alive. It is very rewarding for me to help people feel, and to watch them or show them this world from another perspective. Behind every piece, there is a story...of souls that I met and my own. I feel blessed and really want to make a change in this world with my gift, because I was born to do so, and was sent here to do just that. I would like to create enough to be able to support charities for children around the world...and I will.
