Susan Feldman is a mixed media artist, working primarily with found wood while also using a wide variety of other materials such as yarn, colored string, and plexiglass. Feldman dignifies these discarded materials as environments of observation. Arranged as architectural plans, she transforms each assemblage into a rising structure, that in turn references a metaphorical self-growth. These structured sculptures act as three dimensional landscapes, evoking the stratified, fragmentary nature of history and memory. Her current body of work was inspired by her meditation practice and visualizes the spiritual enlightenment of "rising-up." These all-over compositions take the eye through various planes and materials, which parallel the obstacles and stages of progress through that journey. As opposed to utilitarian constructions indicative of the urban skyline filled with high-rises, Feldman designs structures of contemplation, memory, and hope.

Susan Feldman was born in Los Angeles and attended Cal State University Northridge. She has been exhibiting her work throughout California for over 30 years. Feldman has a background in graphic design, art direction, and is also a dj, (spinning only vinyl), for private parties and art openings.
