

Bio

I started artmaking under the direction of an artistic mother, who was my first influence. I received a BS in a medical profession from SJSU in 1989, where I had the opportunity to take art classes as well.

In 2007 I began studying art/photography at Los Angeles Community College and later at Kline Academy of Art where I was exposed to color studies and realist painting. I moved in a more abstract direction and studied with an established abstract artist, Rebecca Crowell. I began to participate in local Los Angeles art shows and events.

I joined Topanga Gallery in 2014-2015 where I showed with other artists and began to sell my work. In 2015, my personal life took me to Minnesota then back to California, diligently creating art everywhere I have lived and selling to private collectors. I am honored to have had my work included in the book "Cold Wax Medium."
