

Judi Bommarito is a Detroit-based conceptual/visual storyteller and fine art photographer. Since 1999, she has been an adjunct instructor at the College for Creative Studies in Detroit, where she also earned her BFA. Her work has received recognition and numerous awards, both nationally and internationally. A selection of images from the Detroit series "Concealed Reality" were featured in the international exhibition "Immigrantopolis," shown and curated by the Department of Sociology of Culture Pedagogical University of Krakow, Poland. This series was also showcased in the Harvard Graduate School of Design - "Future of the American City" exhibition. Additionally, an image from "Concealed Reality" was selected for inclusion in the "Manifest International Photography Annual INPHA 7" publication after a rigorous jurying process. Judi's work was also featured in the publication "Investigations In Infrastructure," a survey of contemporary photography exploring the infrastructure of our everyday environment. Lastly, a selection of images were featured in the online publication "Ain't Bad" - An Independent publisher of new photographic art.

Judi's series "Concealed Reality" inspired by her Detroit explorations, contests the divisions between imagery and experience. Using layering and moving between the translucent and opaque, her photographs draw on experiences of loss and abandonment to confront nuances of memory. Observing the shifts of perception that occur between moments in time and how they are received. Judi creates these moments of reflection to offer hope and light to others.
