Painting: "Acclimate Yourself"

My work is filtered through my road-weary, sometimes jaded and warped mind with a unique "woman-elder" perspective. It's pure feeling, mainly allowing chaos to self-organize into a form that might be understood visually - as I evolve and learn to understand that visual art expresses what we know without words but with experiences and sensory understanding.

As I approach a new piece of work. I typically have a process where colors are decided and I just let loose on the canvas with nothing in my logic mind and let my angst, joy, frustration, silliness, or a thousand other feelings dictate the movement of the work. It's enjoyable to learn how people perceive the finished pieces and tell me what they feel I might have been thinking; sometimes they're spot on, sometimes not so much; I love for people to get their own feelings from my work and interpret in their own ways.
