Like most artists, the environment in which I live plays a huge role in what is produced, both consciously and subconsciously. Going for long walks and being aware of my surroundings have become an important part of my process. Urban, suburban, and natural settings all dictate the work that I create. Ultimately, I strive to bring a balance of intuition and intention to the art of making. The images are physical manifestations from my observations of our surroundings. They reflect my attempt to capture the energy or “feeling” of life within my current “landscape” thorough various modes of representation. Just like our environment, my work is constantly shifting and switching gears. In the end, it is about making a visually interesting and thought provoking image that evokes a feeling of the collective world which surrounds us.
